THIS WEEK'S HIGHLIGHT Labor Day 2017

Whatever you do, work heartily, as for the Lord and not for men. — Colossians 3:23

All work, even the most menial tasks, has great dignity.

In our work we are God's hands, sustaining and caring for His world. One of the main ways to please God in our work is simply to do work well. Some have called this "the ministry of competence." Christians can and must have deep appreciation for the work of those who work skillfully but do not share our beliefs.

The Christian faith gives us a new world-and-life view that shapes the character of our work. All well-done work that serves the good of human beings pleases God. Christians must think out how their faith will distinctly shape their work. The Christian faith gives you:

- a new identity, without which work can sink you.
- a new concept of the dignity of all work.
- a moral compass, without which work can corrupt you.
- a new worldview, without which work will be your master, not your servant.

How wonderful that the gospel works on every aspect of us — mind, will, and feelings — and enables us to both deeply appreciate the work of non-believers and yet aspire to work in unique ways as believers. Being Christian leads us to see our work not as merely a way to earn money, nor as primarily a means of personal advancement, but truly a calling — to serve God and love our neighbor.
